We knew that returning to our roots would be the best choice for a young couple that was eager to start a family. Also, the majority of our family and friends remain here, and having that love and support is irreplaceable. Jeff always knew that one day he wanted to take over his father's business, Gian's Deli, but this opportunity came earlier than expected when his father lost his battle to cancer in 2009. As a young couple, and now family of four, we've grown to love San Joaquin County for its people, restaurants, and family-friendly venues.

Both being touched by cancer, Jeff and I have become very passionate about the mission of the American Cancer Society. We have been fundraisers, volunteers, and I recently held a position with the organization in their mission delivery department.

Gian's Deli supports the fundraising efforts of local schools, non-profit organizations, and churches.

I just completed my five-year term with the women's organization, Lambda Theta Phi, where I held several different positions on the board and managed their annual shopping party event.

We have two boys, Luke and Matteo (ages 3 and 17 months), who are spending many of their summer days swimming and playing baseball. We love spending time with our family in our home away from home, Aptos.
